What a Few Months will do for You in the

Just think of it—such opportunities today, a boy at manual labor, with long hours, poor pay, hard work, all kinds of exposure, little pleasure, and no opportunity for advancement or culture. Tomorrow a student in a large school, the largest of its kind in the South with pleasant surroundings, congenial fellow-students, earnest and helpful teachers, and every incentive to do good work. A few months of this, each day gaining new strength and new life, and becoming better equipped for the duties which must come, each morning receiving fresh inspiration and new thoughts which will help in the day's work; each evening a sweet consciousness of duty performed, of something mastered and something learned he did not know before, and then, almost before it is realized or dreamed of, the course is finished. A vast realm in the college office for a graduate, and a student is sent out into the business world of which he is to become a part.

The statements made above are not overstatements. These opportunities are for you, but opportunities coupled with inaction can benefit no one. Inaction and inaction keep thousands from success. Stop hesitating. Days make years. Time saved means dollars made later. Stop saying, "That's all right for some, but I'm afraid to risk it." You risk nothing by preparing for something better than you are now doing. Do you want to sit down and say, "I hold just as good a position as I expect to hold, because I am not capable of doing anything better?" Of course, you do not. Without an effort on your part to better your condition, you will never hold a better position than you now occupy. The world will not force success upon you. It has success, but only for those who are prepared for it.

Just three things are necessary to enable you to realize the desired end—the "I want to," the "I will," and the "I get busy." You don't want to wait. Enter at the beginning of the Fall Session, Sept. 14. The College will have everything in readiness for your comfort. When you have shown your teachers that you are prepared to do good work in someone's office, the College will be ready to say to you, "Here is your diploma; there is your position; you have earned them both."

Don't forget the date—Sept. 14. Catalogue, prospectus, specimens of penmanship gladly sent free to those interested. Address

E. M. COULTER, Pres., Roanoke, Va.
